

SOCIAL NETWORKING FACT SHEET

STATISTICS AND DEVELOPMENTS INDICATING THE NECESSITY OF SOCIAL NETWORKS FOR BUSINESS AND MARKETING

Provided by Kenton Newby, Internet Marketing Strategist
Max Response Media, LLC

During the summer of 2006, we saw several key indicators that business executives and investors were taking keen notice of social networks and their potential impact on the online advertising and marketing arena.

Many popular bookmarking and social networking sites have been acquired by larger corporations – the most famous of which was of course Google’s acquisition of social video network, YouTube.

However, what is more interesting to business owners and C-level executives are the large investments now being made into advertising models and programs within social networks.

In June, Interpublic Group announced it would be developing marketing programs on FaceBook for its agency clients to the tune of $10 million worth of ad space.

In early July, WPP Group invested $2 million into corporate social network, LiveWorld. This unique joint venture will help WPP’s agency clients, such as the skincare company Dove, deploy their own social networks.

We find it fascinating, as a company that participates in both the social networking and search optimization spaces, that Fortune 1000 companies and large advertising agencies are recognizing the importance and profitability of social networks far faster than they recognized the benefits of search marketing.

However, to the benefit of the small business or medium-sized company, these large corporations will take time to implement their large-scale campaigns, while their smaller counterparts are moving quickly to acquire their piece of the social networking pie.

For instance, Forrester’s December 2005 survey of marketing executives showed that 13% were marketing via blogs or social networks at the time, but 51% forecasted “total adoption” of such marketing strategies within the next 12 months.

BUT JUST HOW LARGE IS THE SOCIAL NETWORKING SPACE?

According to comScore Media Metrix, the total US internet audience has grown by roughly 4% in 2006. Yet several social networks like MySpace, Facebook, and Bolt have seen growth percentages in the triple-digits.

According to Nielsen/NetRatings, the top 10 social networks (MySpace, ClassMates.com, Flickr, FaceBook, YouTube, etc.) received roughly 68.8 million unique visitors by 2005 – reaching 45% of all active web users.

That means that nearly 50% of all internet traffic ran through one or more social networks that year. The 2006 numbers were equally impressive...

In June of 2006, US web stats company, Compete, released some fascinating data that blew 2005's growth out of the water:

Their Key Findings:

- 1 In June, 2006, 2 out of every 3 people online visited a social network
- 2 Social Networking sites were poised to eclipse the traffic numbers of search giants like Google and Yahoo!
- 3 MySpace received 55 million visitors in June 2006

For those of us who participate in the global markets, it's interesting to note that Bebo overtook MySpace as the top social network in the UK during most of 2006.

And of course, the trends seen in 2005 and 2006 continued to today.

WILL THE SOCIAL NETWORKING FAD LAST?

Jon Gibs, senior director of Nielsen/NetRatings, said social networking sites are the "reality television of the Internet."

"The content is relatively inexpensive for publishers to produce, and social networking is not a fad that will disappear," Gibs points out. "If anything, it will become more ingrained in mainstream sites, just as reality TV programming has become ubiquitous in network programming."

This means immense opportunity for any business owner or executive. First of all, online advertising is far more affordable than television or traditional media advertising. But more importantly, there are ways to market yourself in the various social networks without spending money on advertising.

These strategies include maintaining your own blog, creating profiles for your company on MySpace and other networks to interact directly with your audience (without spamming, as we've seen recently occurring on MySpace), producing engaging and buzz-worthy content that gets circulated among bookmarking websites (as well as Technorati), and producing media content for networks like YouTube and BlogTalkRadio.

The key to success in marketing with social networks is to understand that there's no middle man here. No marketing hoopla. And no wall of corporate messaging to hide behind.

Social networks are transparent and to effectively engage their audiences you have to be willing to be transparent as well. Then all you need are some creative strategies for communicating with your audience – which we are happy to provide you.

If you found this report useful, then you'll get even more value from our free competitive analysis. Request a free competitive analysis and you'll find out:

- Exactly where your site is ranking in the search engines and for what terms...
- What your site is doing right and what it's doing wrong (and how to improve)...
- More importantly, you'll get a behind the scenes look at the websites of your top competitors...
- Discover exactly how they're able to beat you in the amount of traffic and sales they get online...
- PLUS you'll learn where their biggest weaknesses are and how you can exploit them to pull ahead...

Why not take a second to request your free competitive analysis right now?

You can contact us several ways:

- 1 Complete the contact form found on our website at: www.MaxResponseMedia.com and one of our staff will phone you in the next 24-48 hours.
- 2 Email: info@maxresponsemedia.com
- 3 Phone: (888) 889-1538

We look forward to hearing from you.